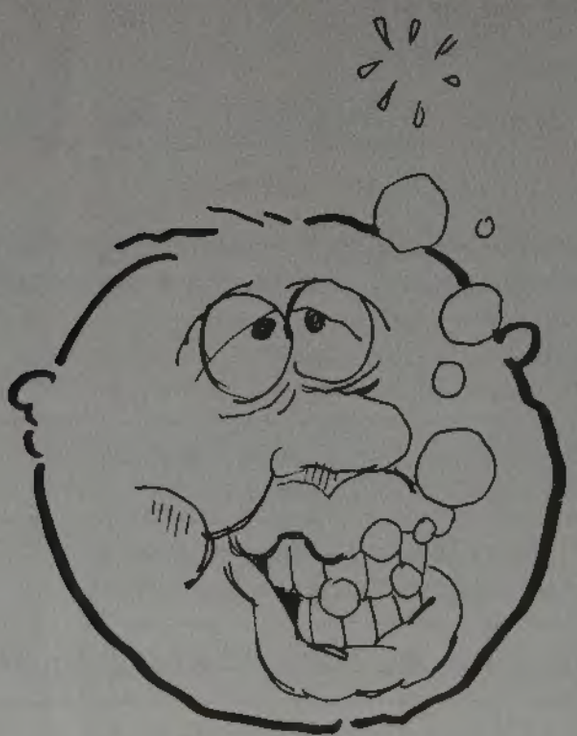
NOTE

As a general point of interest, it should be understood that, physiologically speaking, there are only two ways for a person to get rid of gas, and one of them is through the mouth. The truth of the matter is that when you burp or belch you are simply farting through your teeth. This is why you probably shouldn't do it at the table.



FORWARD

The difference between a burp and a belch is simply one of size.

The belch is the big one.

If you will remember this, the rest is easy.

There are those who argue that the difference is in the taste, that if it has a taste to it, good or bad, it is a belch, and if it doesn't have a taste to it, it is a burp. This is ridiculous. Some enormous belches have no more taste than a Twinkie, while you can have a little burp that will leave a taste in your mouth like a dirty sock. Just remember that if it is big and comes from well down in the guts it is a belch. Everything else, except a barf or a hiccup, of course, is a burp.

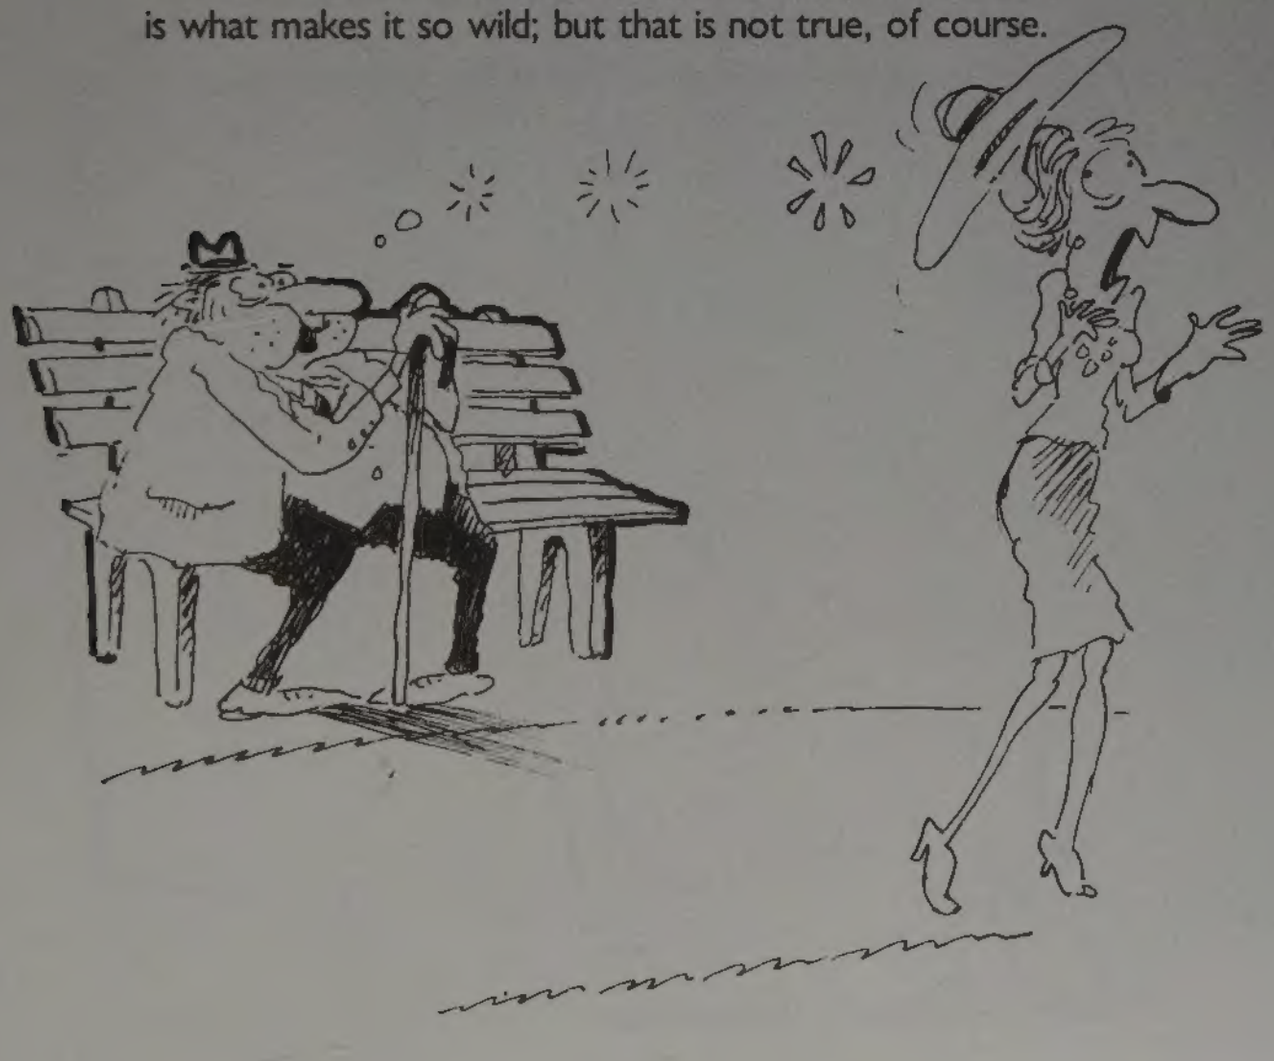
THE FAT LADY BELCH

Generally, a lady will prefer to burp rather than to belch, it being more delicate, I suppose. But when it comes to belching it is my opinion that a person's sex has nothing to do with it. It is the waist size of the belcher that matters most. Holler down into a barrel and you will get a sound like thunder. Holler down into a chimney pipe and you will hardly get an echo. That is the difference. Still, when you hear the Fat Lady Belch it will surprise you, so powerful a belch, for a lady.

THE GROSS OLD MAN'S BURP

I have noticed that some old men like to burp as often and as loud as they can. I have no idea why they like to do this, but they do. Maybe it makes them feel young. I imagine they would like to belch real loud, too, but generally they don't, probably because there would be a danger, if they really went for it, that they might instead barf.

Speaking of barfs, there are those who say that a wildcat has to barf all the time because it has no anus, and that this is what makes it so wild; but that is not true, of course.



THE SKINNY KID BURP

Some kids really like to burp alot. I have noticed that they are usually tall skinny kids. They will drink a root beer or a Coca-Cola just so they can burp. They will burp several times and look around like they are waiting for applause. You seldom hear a skinny kid belch. No doubt this is because their stomaches are so far away from their mouths. They probably fart alot instead, but I do not know this for a fact.

THE FAT LADY BURP

This is altogether different than the Fat Lady Belch, described elsewhere in this work. It is a burp to be noted most of all for its modesty. It is almost a silent burp, no more to be heard than a sigh. The lady will lift the back of her hand to her mouth and maybe roll her eyes a little, but you will hardly know when the burp is burped. It will surprise you, the way it would be if she had suddenly walked by you on tip-toe, to be so big.

THE LITTLE FAT KID BELCH

Little fat kids belch as easy as tall skinny kids burp. Unfortunately, they do it about as much, too. It can be disgusting, but they always seem proud of it.

THE ECCLESIAS-TICAL BURP

This is a fine-sounding musical name for a burp, all right, but the burp itself is usually a dud, with no feeling to it at all. This is because only ministers or very religious people burp the Ecclesiastical Burp, and their minds are on higher things. They will have a far-away look in their eye, like they are meditating or something. Then they burp. It can be unnerving.

THE BABY BURP

Then, of course, there is the Baby Burp, which is kind of cute, if you are lucky and the kid doesn't barf instead. I have noticed that a baby will be half asleep but when it burps its eyes will pop open, like the burp has come as a surprise. Even some adults will do a Baby Burp now and then – mostly girls – and their eyes will pop open and they will look surprised, but in my opinion they are just trying to look cute.

THE BULLY'S BURP

Anyone – usually a kid or a construction worker – who burps right in your face, and then laughs, has burped the Bully's Burp. He will be the sort of person who talks about different things to do with a dead cat while you are eating your lunch.

THE LITTLE OLD LADY'S BURP

You do not generally think of little old ladies as doing something cute, but they can sometimes burp as cute as anything. They will smile every time. It is as if they get a thrill from having done something, even if it was only to give a burp. But do not be fooled, some of them can belch like a cow.

THE SUPER-SHY BELCH

This is a belch by a very shy person who is trying not to call attention to himself in a crowd. He will do his damnedest not to belch. In which case he will sometimes turn blue in the face and really scare some people. It would have been better if he had just gone ahead and belched. Because in the end he belches anyhow.

THE COMPLI-MENTARY BELCH

Among certain ethnic groups a good belch at the end of a meal is considered a high compliment to the cook. Of course, back in the days of the early Romans if a fellow wanted to show how much he liked a meal he had just eaten, he would go barf and come back and eat another one. Which is pretty far out, if you ask me. These days, even the Complimentary Belch is becoming increasingly rare.

THE BUG-OFF BELCH

Burps and belches can also be used for communication, although words obviously are better suited to this purpose, or we would go around burping and belching at each other just to pass the time of day. But when someone is really being a bore or getting on your case, a good belch is as good an answer to them as would be telling them to bug-off. You can always say, "Pardon me," after you have belched, but they will get the message, even so.
The Bug-Off Belch, however, is generally employed only by kids or people from a very low station in life.

THE BIG BASS BURP

This is a surprisingly low-register burp, which can easily be mistaken for a belch. However, it lacks the sound of upward passage that is the distinguishing characteristic of a belch. It is just a very loud deep-sounding burp. It may shake the burper's head a little, but it is still only a burp.

THE BELCH-BURP

This is the only double-noted burp, being a belch that terminates with a burp, usually to the surprise of the person who has achieved the Belch-Burp and to those around him. Often some wise guy will say, "Will you do that again please?" This is a rare one and is apt to happen mostly to very nervous people.

THE GROWLER BELCH

This is a very common belch by male adults who like to let people know they are around. It sounds a lot like an old dog growling, as though any second the person might actually bark. This is definitely a post-puberty belch, as most kids have better manners and/or not enough guts for it.

THE SNEEZE BURP

Just as people will accidentally sneeze and fart at the same time, they will sometimes sneeze and burp at the same time. Some will say this is a two-noted burp, but it isn't. The sneeze may be loud but you will hear the burp, all to itself, clear and single-noted, as the sneeze will have given it added power. Note the confused look on the face of the burper; he is not sure what he has done.

THE CEMENT-MIXER BELCH

This is a common belch with people, mostly men, of the sort who have not looked down and been able to see their feet in years, and who are proud of it. They will start a belch off and then lose it, and then start it again. You will hear what sounds like gears grinding or gravel being walked on, and then it will stop. Like a car that won't start. Then they will belch. It will sound like a cement mixer. You will wonder if it hurts. But they will look pleased, as though they had belched a normal belch.

THE BLAST BELCH

This loud explosive belch has been known to rock a person right back on their heels. It can loosen false teeth or turn your hat around. It has all the force of a mighty fart, which is probably what it should have been. Spectators will be alarmed. You should have no trouble spotting this one.

THE SILENT BURP

If you are not watching the person who burps the Silent Burp you would never know they had burped. They will put you in mind of a fish, making a big round mouth and then closing it and making no sound at all. If they did it under water you would see the bubble, I suppose. This burp is rare and occurs mostly with air swallowers.

THE BURP-UM-BURP BURP

This is an unusual burp, being really two burps, coming one after the other, with the sound, "um" separating them. People often make funny little sounds after they burp, like "Um" or "Oops" or "Ahhh", but the Burp-Um-Burp burp has a kind of jazzy sound to it that sets it apart. It is one of the more interesting burps, if you have an ear for that sort of thing.

THE MIDDLE C BURP

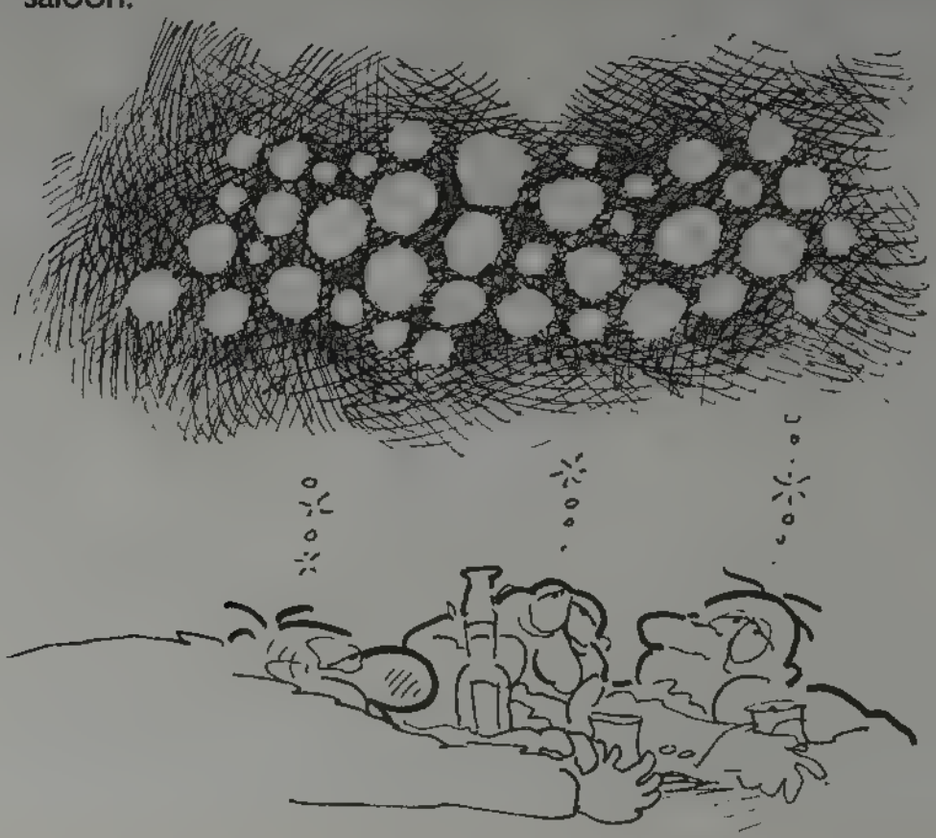
This unusual burp just happens to strike the musical note of middle C, sometimes in perfect pitch. People with musical inclinations will often hum a few bars of their favorite melody after surprising themselves with this burp. It is a rare one, however.

THE FOOTBALL BELCH

This is a belch by an adult male watching a football game on television and can easily be identified, even from the next room, by its violence. It can be powered by beer or whiskey, either one, but there is no belch that more clearly communicates the emotions of raw brute passion, even of rage. This last is particularly true if the person who belched is rooting for the team that happens to be losing.

THE BEER BELCH

It is interesting to note that people drinking beer tend to belch, whereas people drinking soda pop are more apt simply to burp. This is not a hard and fast rule, of course; sometimes a person drinking a soda pop will save it all up and practically blow the top off his head with a belch. But what is most significant about a Beer Belch is the odor. Two or three people drinking beer in a room in no time at all will belch enough Beer Belches to make the room smell like a corner saloon. Which is okay, I guess, if you like the smell of a corner saloon.



THE WHISKEY BELCH

The Whiskey Belch is one of the few non-food belches that is identified chiefly by its odor, which is that of an old bar rag. The cheaper the whiskey the worse the odor, or so I am told. Regretably, people drinking whiskey often think nothing of belching right in your face. It can turn your stomach.

THE ITALIAN BELCH

Most Italians prefer belching to burping. This is simply a matter of their natural temperament, their general disdain of the trivial or subtle characteristics which I, for one, greatly admire. The Italian Belch holds nothing back. At its best it may be greeted by others present with exclamations of awe and approval. It is unfortunate, however, that about half the time the Italian Belch reeks of garlic.

THE MEXICAN BELCH

It is said that a true full-blown Mexican Belch can start a fire, but this is surely an exaggeration. However, Mexicans are known to eat some pretty hot stuff on occasion so it is reasonable to assume that they now and then belch pretty hot, too. Of course anyone can belch a Mexican Belch if they know what to eat, which is anything seasoned hot enough to bring tears to your eyes. People belching a Mexican Belch may not receive applause, but it is certainly nothing to be ashamed of.

THE JAPANESE BURP

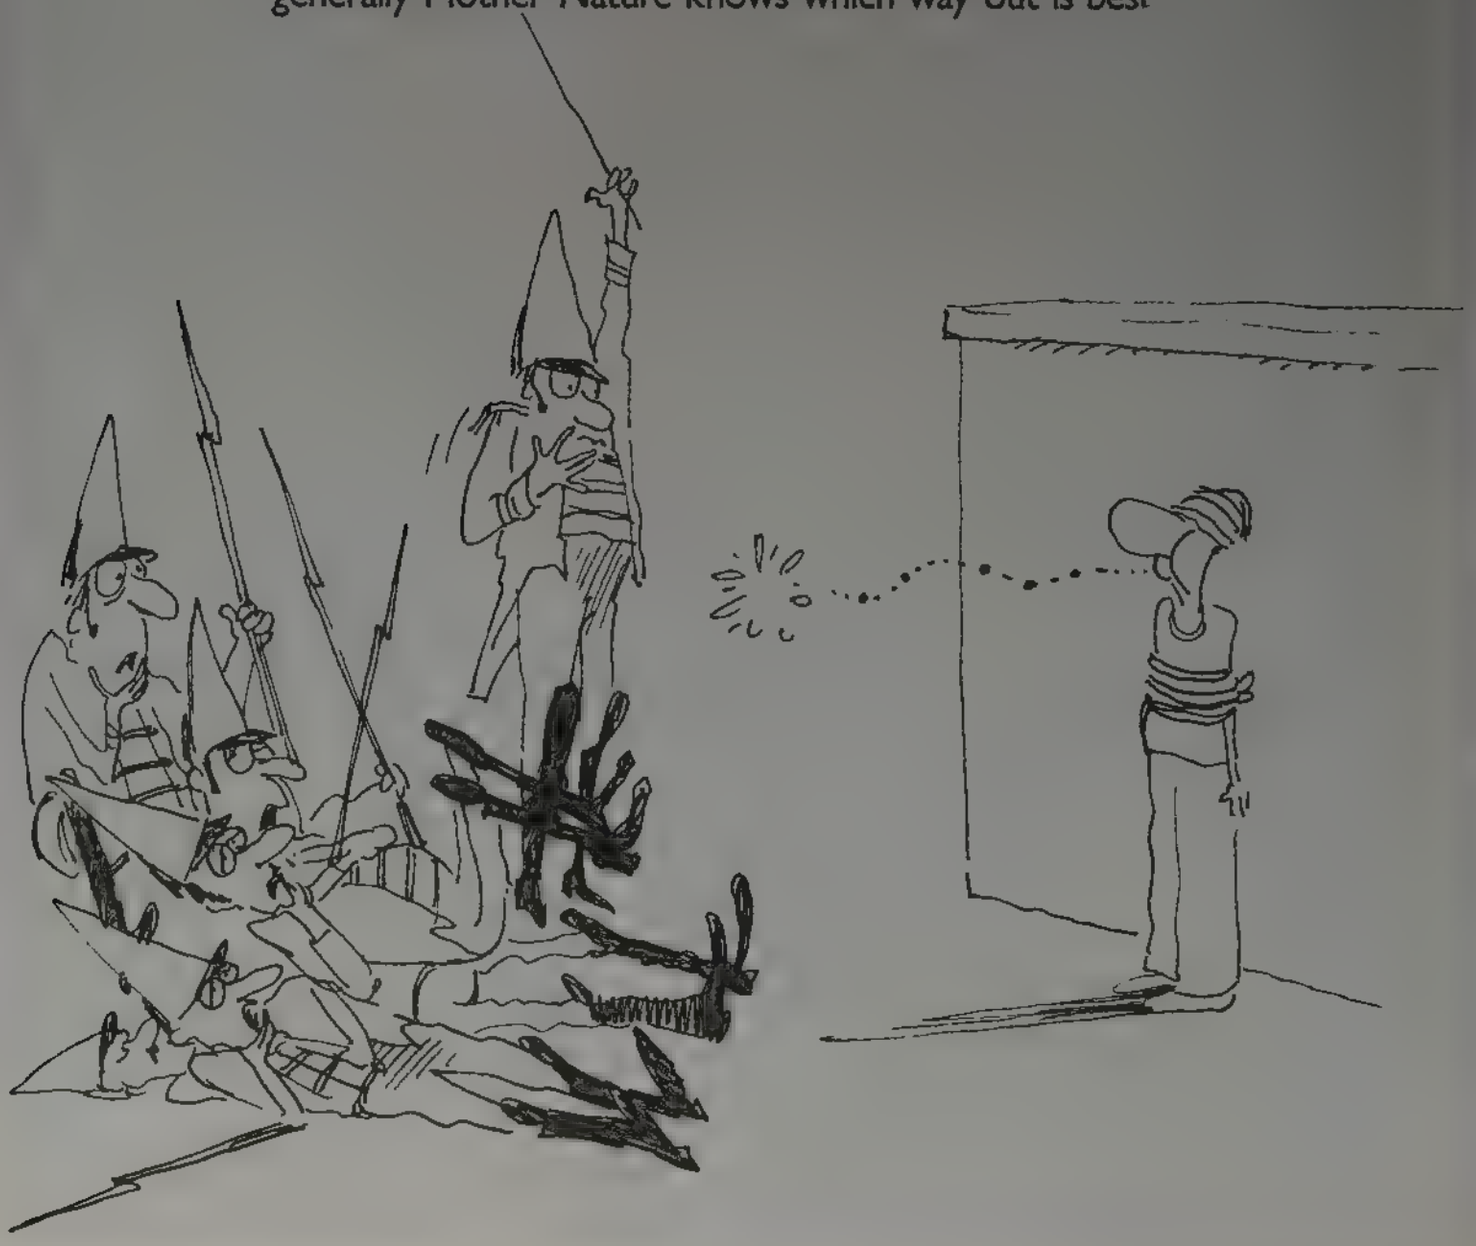
This is a very modest and well-mannered burp delivered almost exclusively by elderly Japanese-American gentlemen, the burp being executed politely behind a cupped hand lifted to the mouth, usually with the head averted, this last probably due to the fact that it will often have about it a faint odor of fish.

THE ENGLISH BURP

The English Burp is similar in many respects to the Japanese Burp, being equally modest in scope and well-mannered in execution. However, with the English Burp the head is not averted – a reflection, perhaps, of traditional English attitudes of class, Empire and that sort of thing – and the back of the hand, rather than the palm, is held before the mouth, this apparently being considered by the English as the most classy way to burp. However, a lot of sissies burp that way, too.

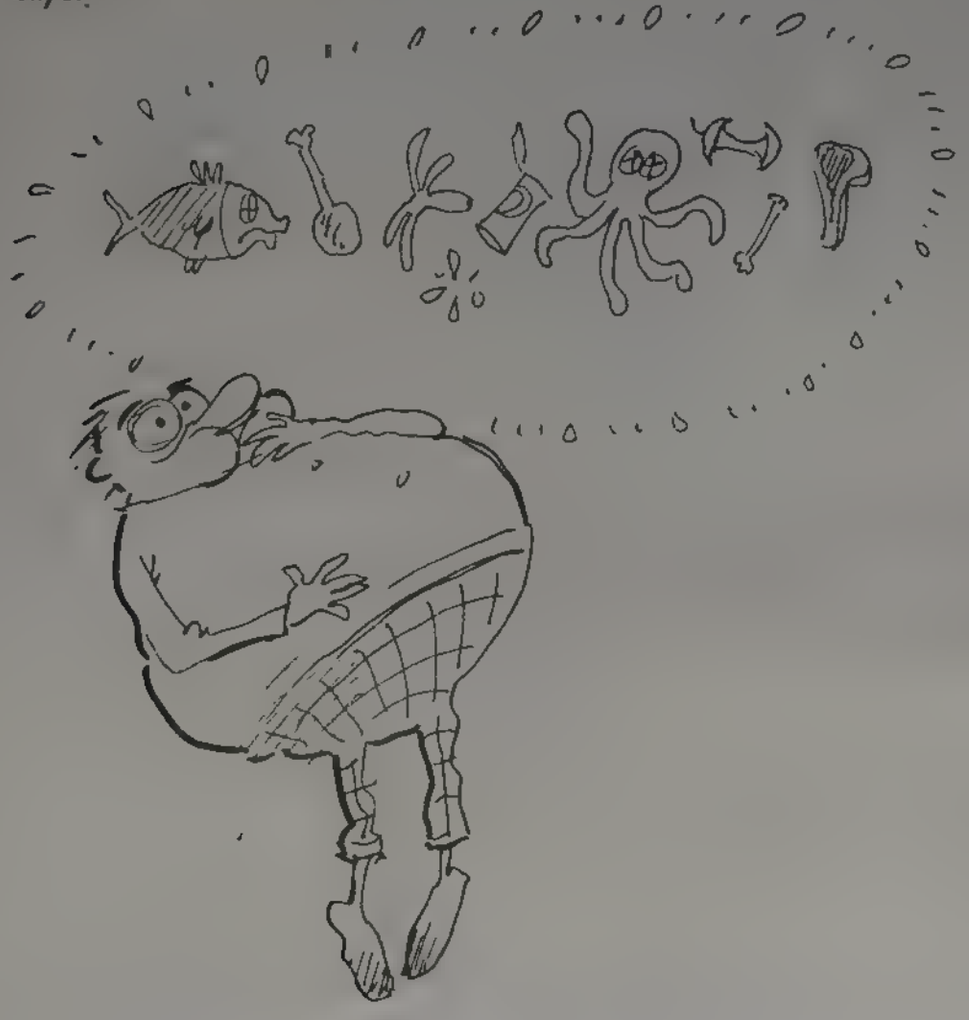
THE BAD BELCH

A lot of people would rather not fart if they could belch instead, especially in public. This is understandable, in that when you belch you are calling attention to your face, at least, rather than elsewhere; but now and then a person can belch a belch that in sound and odor could more easily have been forgiven of a fart. People will back away from such a belch. "That was a bad belch," someone will say. And that is the name for it all right. Fortunately, this belch is rare, as generally Mother Nature knows which way out is best



THE MYSTERY BELCH

At one time or another just about everyone will experience the Mystery Belch, which has a taste to it that you really have to wonder about. It does not taste at all like anything you remember having eaten recently, or ever. It does not taste like anything that could ever have been food. It is a taste both totally unrecognizable and altogether rotten. What the hell did I eat, you wonder? Or is there something dead in my stomach? It is not uncommon for a person to spit several times after belching the Mystery Belch or even to go and brush their teeth. You will wonder about it sometimes for days.



THE INDIAN BURP

I have been told that the American Indian never burps. Never ever. This, if true, is certainly remarkable and a tribute to the character of the American Indian, I guess.

THE COW BELCH

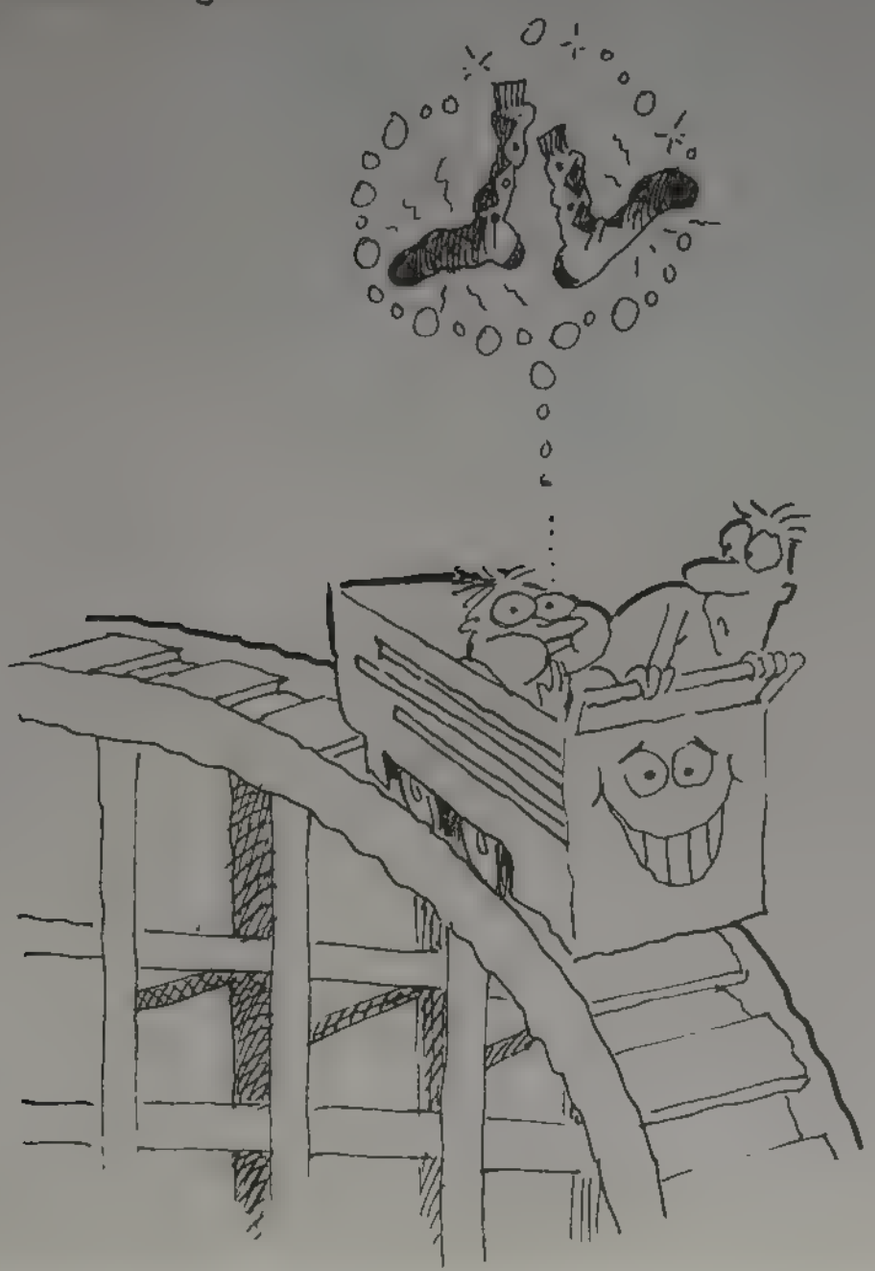
Cows can really belch; in fact it is one of the most dramatic things a cow ever does. I have been around cows, and in my opinion a good cow belch could blow out a candle. If a cow could fart it would really be something. I have never known a cow to fart, however. But this work is not about animal burps or belches, and the Cow Belch described here is a belch by a person in which it seems that while no real particulate matter has come up with the belch, it feels like something has, and, like a cow chewing its cud, you sort of chew at it and then swallow the thing back down. This is the Cow Belch, and if it never happens to you you have not missed anything great, believe me.

THE SILENT BURP II

This is a companion, so to speak, to the silent fart, at least when the aim in both instances is one of concealment. In this regard, the Silent Burp is generally the more consistently successful of the two, as all you need to do with the Silent Burp, when you burp, is to keep your mouth shut. You may look a little funny, but no one will know why, which is seldom the case with the silent fart. (Note: It is probably wise never to attempt a silent belch, due to the danger of rupturing something).

THE DIRTY SOCK BURP

Taste is diagnostic with this burp; it tastes like a dirty sock. You will wonder how a little simple burp could taste so strong and so rotten, particularly as most burps have very little taste at all. But this one does. It depends, of course, on what you have been eating. Generally speaking, it takes a pretty weird combination of foods to result later in a Dirty Sock Burp, but some people, kids especially, eat some pretty strange stuff. Bananas and peanut butter with root beer, for instance. Try burping that. Maybe not the taste of a dirty sock, but it will not be good.



THE ANSWER BURP

This burp injects itself into a conversation as though in reply to a question. It is never the right answer. As for instance, the question: "Do you love me?" Answer: "Burp." Better than a belch, maybe, but not much. These burps can be funny under the right circumstances, but this is seldom the case. If it happens to you it probably won't seem funny at all.

THE GOOD BELCH

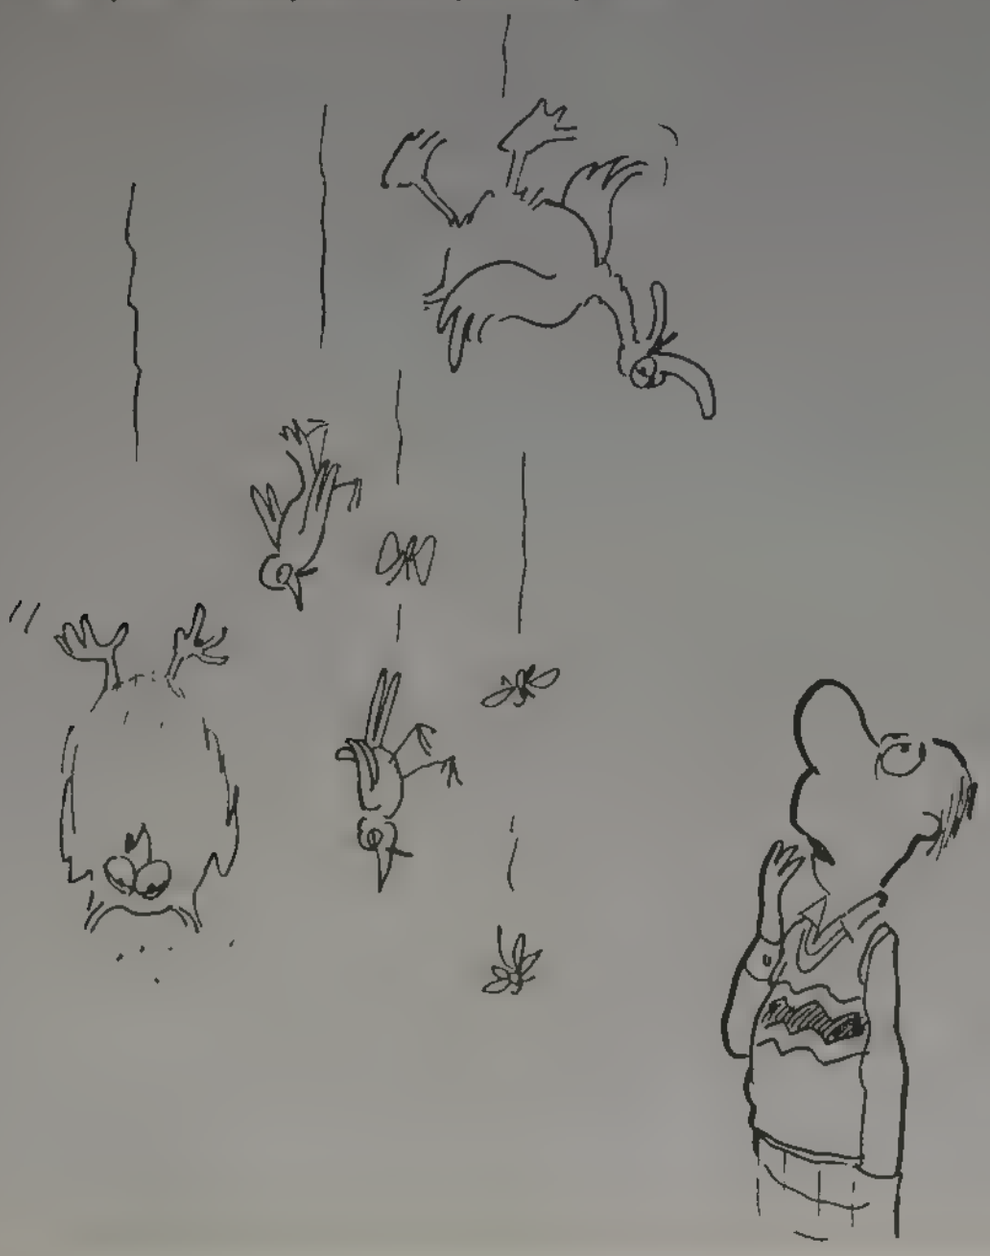
Just as there is a Bad Belch (described elsewhere in this work) there is also a Good Belch. Everything about a Good Belch is good. It tastes good. It feels good. It sounds good. There are things in life more deeply satisfying, I'm sure, but a Good Belch is a Good Belch and should be appreciated, even if the people around you at the time seem to think that you have merely committed a minor indiscretion. You can say to them, "That was a good belch," if you want to, but they most likely will remain indifferent.

THE GARLIC BELCH

Only the Deadly Belch has more of a negative impact on other people and the surrounding environment than the Garlic Belch, which has been known to make household pets leave home forever. Small children will sometimes up-chuck simply upon walking into a room where a person has belched the Garlic Belch. Mahatma Gandhi was a great believer in the virtues of garlic and would eat it raw, which may or may not have had something to do with his practice of celibacy during the latter part of his life. He may have had no other options, if he belched much. A great man, for all that.

THE DEADLY BELCH

This belch has been known to kill houseplants and render canaries forever mute (It is true that certain traumatic experiences in the life of a canary can stop it from ever singing again, or, if it is a female canary, from ever laying another egg). It is a combination of sound, odor, duration and intensity that makes the Deadly Belch so deadly. Fortunately this belch is rare, and unless you are a real slob of a pig at the table and heavy into belching, your canary and your houseplants are probably safe.



THE REPEATING BURP

This burp is similar to a case of hiccups and is usually about as harmless, however annoying it may be to others. But occasionally the Repeating Burp is nature's way of warning you that you are in for a barf or two, in which case you will probably get the message in time, if you have been paying attention and not just showing off.

THE POPCORN BURP

Someone has to be eating popcorn for this burp to occur. What happens is that a bunch of popcorn sprays out with the burp pretty much as it does when you sneeze while eating popcorn. Usually when you burp nothing else happens, which is what makes this burp different, and sometimes interesting, as when the popcorn lands in your grandmother's soup.

THE DEAD BELCH

Dead people don't belch, of course; I am talking about a belch, familiar to us all, that stirs powerfully around deep down in your guts and gets you all worked up and hopeful, and then nothing comes of it. It just dies. I suppose this should be considered one of life's minor disappointments, but it can be frustrating all the same. Of course, later if you fart you can figure that it didn't really die after all, but that never helps much.

THE SURE THING BELCH

You put the two little wafers in a glass of water – plop plop – and watch them effervesce, and then you drink the stuff and, sure enough, you will soon belch a good one. Sometimes you may even feel better. But it is for certain that you will get a good belch out of it. Maybe a couple. This is the Sure Thing Belch, and okay, I guess, but somehow it seems to me like cheating.

THE HAPPINESS BELCH

Someone has said, "Happiness is a good meal followed by a good belch." Okay, I said it. But by and large I believe it is true. Have a good meal followed by a good belch, and it may not be the happiest thing that will ever happen to you, but there are a lot worse things that will, for sure; so take the Happiness Belch for what it is worth, and belch, smile and be happy!

Everyone burps and belches, but not everyone wants to. All people do not burp and belch the same. How a person burps or belches will depend a lot on how they are built and how they feel about things. People who swallow a lot of air when they eat will burp and belch more than most people. They will also fart more than most people. But this work deals only with burps and belches.
